

The end of 20th century has witnessed a real revolution in term of digitalisation and information which remarkably and heavily influenced the different components of international relations. More importantly, information became the principal determinant of the different interactions between states, especially, with the great revolution that has occurred in information and communication technology (I.C.Ts).

however, foreign policy is one of the most important field that has known this evolvment and being influenced by the big technological mutation which led to the geographic borders withdrawal and minimization of immaterial power, as well as the enlargement of the capacity of different domestic and international actions.

Digital diplomacy represents the capability of political leaders and public opinion to use and accommodate the different digital and social means to rebuild the relationship between international actors and constitutes a new vision to influence public opinion in order to empower states foreign polices. therefore, the importance of digital diplomacy is shown throughout its impacts on decision making and states external behaviour, by facilitating international community's communication process.
